Reardon honors 30-year veteran of Paine Field Fire Dept.

Earlier this week, Snohomish County Executive Aaron Reardon (left) helped honor Capt. Bill Reuter (right) of the Paine Field Fire Department, located at Paine Field Airport in Everett. Reuter is a veteran of the department who recently decided to retire after 30 years of service. Along with an honor-guard procession, Reuter was lauded by fellow staff and others in the community. "It’s employees like Bill Reuter, who believe in what they do and do it well, that make this county great," Reardon said.

County sustains $5.5 million in damages during January storm

Snohomish County’s Department of Emergency Management has reported to the state more than $5.5 million in damages during January’s snow and ice storm.

The report was made to the state’s emergency management department, which has collected totals from Western Washington counties amounting to more than $32 million.

Snohomish County road crews worked around the clock during the January storm to keep roads free of ice and snow. Crews also worked to remove downed trees and limbs due to heavy ice accumulations, assisting the Snohomish County PUD when trees had fallen on...
power lines.

Puget Sound counties are hopeful that federal assistance will be available to make repairs where needed. The state is expected to contact the Federal Emergency Management Agency soon.

“In Snohomish County, crews worked hard to keep roads open and residents safe, but we also sustained damages that now need repairs,” County Executive Aaron Reardon said. “Federal assistance would allow us to make those repairs sooner than later.”
