In Search of a Unique Juvenile Salmon in the Snoqualmie River While the vast majority of juvenile Chinook leave the Snoqualmie River by late spring, some juveniles remains for an entire year. We know relatively little about these juveniles including their distribution and habitat use. In an effort to address these questions, King County has recently completed a study specific to juvenile Chinook with extended freshwater rearing. Tune in to hear more about these unique juvenile Chinook and how they may be critical for salmon recovery in the Snoqualmie River.	Josh Kubo, King County	9:55—10:35
